

ABSTRACT

The mismatch between the distributions of acoustic models and features in speech recognition may cause performance degradation. A sequential variance adaptation (SVA) adapts the covariances dynamically based on a sequential EM algorithm. The original covariances in acoustic models are adjusted by scaling factors which are sequentially updated once new collection data is available.